Rex Reed in the New York Observer said, "a lively, lonely and likeable performance by Richard Gere as a New York con man—one of those nattily dressed guys you see browsing Bergdorf's without buying anything, the ones who know the price of everything and the aesthetic value of nothing at all..."

"Gere presides over it all with an impressively self-effacing portrait of a man who, while you wouldn't want to experience him in real life, remains fascinating onscreen from beginning to end. Of the countless hustler characters who have driven dramatic films over the decades, Gere makes this one distinctive and different..." — Hollywood Reporter

"(His) acting work keeps getting better late in his career" — Variety
